

You are invited to join the Security Research Initiative

Each year we design, research and report on a study addressing topics of importance to security. We aim to develop insights on key issues to give you an advantage in your own work and to facilitate industry learning and development. Having the open dialogue and partnership approach that comes from participating in this initiative is really important in allowing the security industry to move forward and advance its position in the business market.

THE RESEARCH

COVID-19 and the implications for security: has anything changed, and why?

This project will explore the security response to Covid-19, not just at the height of the crisis but in its aftermath, to identify what the lessons are for good security. This will include looking at why security succeeded and failed; what has and will have to change in how security is provided; and what this pandemic has demonstrated about the value of security. This will include consideration of contract security, corporate security teams, and other security sector stakeholders and supporters such as security associations and the security press. The aim is to provide insights that will help the sector reflect and understand how to develop a stronger response to future crises.
